* **Three different file types:** Photoshop accepts images in a number of different file formats. If you have a scanner or camera that takes images in one of the Photoshop-recognizable formats—TIFF, JPEG, or PNG—you can use it with Photoshop without any conversion. However, if you have an original image file, you need to convert it into a TIFF or JPEG for import into Photoshop. (See the section "Working with a digital photo," later in this chapter, for details on how to convert your images to TIFF or JPEG.) You can use Photoshop's Preflight feature (Fast Preview) on an image as a way to check its file format. If the file has a checkmark next to the file format in the Preflight panel, you can skip to the next step in this chapter. * **Presets:** Photoshop comes with a large assortment of "presets" for creating similar images in one easy step. This step helps when you are designing a series of related pictures or want to create an image that looks like another image. You use Photoshop's Print panel to control a number of settings, such as image output size, color, and quality. You can create a preset and save it so you can reuse the settings. See the section "Picking the right image settings for any purpose" for details on creating and customizing a color and image-editing preset. * **Photo-editing filters:** Photoshop has some fun photo-editing filters that are handy. You can use them to create special effects or change an image's appearance and color with filters that simulate exposure, saturation, and so on. These filters are also good when you're looking for the precise adjustment of an eye color or other color setting.

Q: How can I tell an order with "a ton of money" from what society it is produced? I was reading a book called "The Violent_Demographics_of_Capitalism" and I heard the phrase "a ton of money" (well, actually "tons of money") and I'd like to understand how that's possible, or, rather, how you can tell the cultural origin of the money. I'm aware that the French Revolution caused several cash crises in France (1789, 1799 and 1810), so the question is how do you tell an order with "tons of money" from the historical origins? A: They're from the United Kingdom - "ton of money" or "tons" is British English. I've never heard of "United States ton" being used in the UK. I believe this is because British banks had a similar crisis to the French in the 1690's - a time when there was a ton of money circulating, but not enough of a supply for the population. This resulted in the creation of the Bank of England, which was created in 1694 to control the currency supply. The inflation in the 1780's and 1790's was caused by the Bank of England increasing its supply of money, as they gradually drained away the "tons of money" from private, account-based bank money, which had been created to pay for war with the US. This all eventually ended with the foundation of the first Bank of International Settlements, which had a beginning in 1930 and a final close in 1978.
